DEDICATION

The somber reality of death cannot be understood until the first member of the family passes on; then all the rest become increasingly aware of the frailty of life and its brevity.

Mom & Dad (Roscoe, Sr. & Maggie) Keeney brought eight children into the world and all have lived into the senior years of life. Calvin has gone on to be with a father and mother who loved him dearly. The rest of us await the great homecoming that will unite us all again.

TENNESSEE: ANDERSON COUNTY TO ARKANSAS KEENEYS

Family members who furnished information for this research: Wayne C. Keeney, Modesto, CA; Evelyn Warwick Williams, Federal Way, WA; Jack Keeney, Anderson Co. Clerk, Clinton, TN; Dale Steve Keeney, Louisville, TN

Joseph Keeney's heritage in Tennessee can be firmly documented. Born in Greenbrier Co., VA (now WV) about 1760/65, he and his brother John had land claims in Hawkins & Washington Cos., TN as early as 1777-78 and soon after that they migrated to east Tennessee (probably during the Indian wars) and both were listed in the North Carolina archives as Tennessee soldiers during the American Revolution.

As a result of military service, Joseph Keeney received a military warrant (#2143) for 100 acres for his three years as a soldier along the Virginia line (Grant dated 16 Dec 1783); another listing shows a grant of 400 acres in Coopers Run, KY, dated 21 June 1780.

Joseph Keeney joined the Big Pigeon Baptist Church in Cooke Co., TN about 1795 and was dismissed by letter in 1799. This was shortly before Anderson County, just west of Knoxville, was formed in 1801 and Keeney became road overseer in 1803, serving until 13 Sept. 1805. On 19 Mar 1808 Joseph, Sr. deeded 500 acres to son Joseph, Jr. in Anderson County.

In 1804 county records listed the mark of the Joseph Keeney family for their stock: a smooth crop off right ear and an over and under heel on the same ear and/or a Roman I on the shoulder and a X on the buttock. The elder Keeney was appointed justice of the peace, with four others, in December 1807. His name is mentioned on scores of jury lists and court documents until about 1830, when his name does not appear on the Anderson Co. census. However, eight separate land grants are recorded for members of his family between 21 June 1814 and 6 May 1905.

FAMILY RECORDS SPARCE

By 1850 most of the Keeney kin who had entered Tennessee half a century earlier had moved westward. Of Joseph's three sons, the family of son William was the only one that chose to remain. Few, if any, kept family or Bible records and linking family members together requires a lot of census searching and reading between the lines. The information contained here is just a smidgen of what surely must be available in attic and album all over the south and west. Two of the mysteries would be to name the wife and daughters (if any) of Joseph Keeney, Sr.

The 1830 Tennessee census lists Joseph, Michael and William Keeney living on adjacent residences in Anderson County. The 1840 census lists the three along with another William. The 1850 census, the first to list family members, lists at least nine Keeney families.

HOME referred to: Jewish Children's Home, New Orleans

LANDLADY: Mrs. Ada Belle Gwin, Adrian's mother

GOLDEN WEDDING CELEBRATION: August 8, 1992, St. Albans, WV

DIALOGUE: Just the Facts

Author: Doc

Let's just call them GIRL and GUY. Girl had rented a room at Guy's mother's house two days before. She was sitting on the porch swing listening to the sounds of the night.

A street car rumbled by, crowded with noisy people--talking loud to be heard over the clamor. After it was gone a quietness settled over the evening.

Girl was thinking, "I want to see that show; would it be foolish to walk six blocks to the neighborhood movie by myself this late?" Just then a bicycle swung into the yard and a young man jumped off.

"Hey!" she cried out impetuously. "Have you seen that movie with Ronald Reagan and Rita Hayworth?"

He came over to the porch step and stooped to who was talking. "Oh, hello" he said. "and to answer your question, no, I haven't."

"Well, would you go and take me with you?" she asked eagerly. "Sure!" he said. Then carefully pulling out the lining of his pockets, added, "But I'm broke! Plumb flat broke."

"Oh, I'll pay," said Girl. "Okay," he said, wait 'til I put away my bike." When he returned she was waiting and handed him a small coin purse. They talked little as they walked at a fast gait to the theater. He quickened his pace and she had to almost run to keep up. At the theater he paid twenty cents for their tickets and in they went. "How far down?" he whispered. "About half way."

The main feature had just started. Girl never took her eyes off the screen. The one time he started to say something she rebuffed him with a quick "Shhh!"

But when the story got to the part where the hero was to lose his legs, she started crying. GUY quickly went to his pocket and handed her a clean handkerchief.

It was very quiet as they walked home. It had been raining. Suddenly GUY reached up and vigorously shook a tree limb over her head. "Hey," she cried, why did you do that? "I had to get your attention some way!"

GIRL laughed. "Well, you sure did." GUY waited until they got into the house, then asked, "How about my handkerchief?" "When I get back my coin purse," she said, holding out her hand. He quickly handed over the purse and said, "Thanks for the movie."

GIRL quietly opened the door of the room she was to share with a girl from Mexico; she didn't want to wake Alicia.

Next morning GIRL was packing a small bag, planning to spend the week-end on the coast. There came a knock at the door. It was GUY's mother. She handed GIRL a dime. "I think that's what it costs to get in a movie these days," she said. "I don't want my son to be a gigolo." Before GIRL could say a word she was gone.

The week-end at the beach was fun, but GIRL returned with a sunburned back. Alicia noticed her back and said, "I fix." The lotion felt cool and soothing.

The next morning GIRL was picking up her books for class (at Tulane), when there was another knock at the door. It was Guy's mother again. "I'm going to North Carolina today to meet my new daughter-in-law," she said. "If you two girls want to use the kitchen to fix your meals, you're welcome. I won't be back for two weeks." And again she was gone.

During the first week the girls shared their homemade meals with GUY, who seemed particularly interested in helping Alicia with her English. One day they invited a friend or two from school and Alicia invited the lady next door whom she'd met and liked very much. They also walked in the park several times, with Alicia carrying her Spanish-English dictionary. GUY could speak Spanish much better than GIRL, but Alicia would speak only English.

GIRL's friend, Lucille, who had been to the picnic, invited GIRL to a party at her apartment the next Friday. "Starts at 8" she said "and bring GUY with you."

"If he'll come," GIRL replied. "He doesn't stick around the house much as night." But when she asked GUY he seemed eager to accept. "Casual or dress-up?"

"I think it's come as you are," and added impishly, "and it's FREE!" The look of his face showed resentment, but he held his tongue. Alicia declined to go, saying "tonight I sleep."

The party was in full swing when they arrived and GUY seemed to know everyone. He hardly noticed GIRL; she was sorry she'd asked him. But on the way home he said suddenly, "It was good to see the kids I haven't seen for months." Before GIRL could remark about his inattentiveness, he continued, "Want to go biking with me in the morning?"

"I don't have a bike," GIRL said. "I'll furnish the bikes..." he hesitated a second... "for FREE." At 10 'til 7 GIRL was sitting on the front steps when GUY arrived, guiding the bikes. "Try this for size," he said, pushing a girl's bike toward her. "Now, where shall we go?" she said.

"The other day you said you missed seeing hills. I'm taking you to a hill this morning," GIRL said nothing, but thought, "the only hill he can show me in this flat town is an art hill."

They rode into the park past the swimming pool and the little zoo into a part GIRL hadn't seen before. "How much farther?" "Just around the next bend," GUY replied. And sure enough there was a hill!!! It was about as high as a three-story building, but it was a hill. GUY reached back and took GIRL's hand.

"We'll rest when we get to the top," he said. She said nothing, but realized that she was glad he was holding her hand.

"The city school system had this built to show little kids what a hill is," he said as he sat on the grass beside her. For several moments they just sat there, enjoying the cool of the morning. Then GUY reached over and stroked her hair.

"Your hair is mighty pretty with the sun shining on it," he said. When she turned to look at him he leaned over and kissed her quickly.

Suddenly GIRL thought of Bob. She hadn't thought of him for a week, but for the past seven years she had dated him--even thought she was in love with him. "Penny for your thoughts?" Guy said, snatching her back to reality. She said nothing for a while, and then abruptly said, "I'm hungry!"

"Good," said GUY, reaching for the saddlebag on his bike. Out came four doughnuts and a pint thermos of coffee. "There's no cream, but here's the sugar." They ate and drank in silence. "We'd better go," GUY said finally, "I've got lots to do today."

By night GIRL's week-old sunburn was giving her fits. Alicia was out, but she heard someone whistling outside. She went to the porch where she heard GUY whistling "Oh, Susannah".

"I'm looking for someone to scratch my back," GIRL said sweetly. "Would you?" GUY made room for her on the swing, noting "that's a bad burn; your whole back is peeling."

"This is the first sunburn I've ever had," she said as she leaned closer to him. Immediately his arms were around her, holding her tight. He said, "You know something? I think I'm falling in love with you."

GIRL said nothing. Her mind was back home again, but Bob had never told her that he loved her. "The funny thing," she mused, "I feel right at home in his (GUY's) arms. I must be homesick," she said aloud.

"Well," said GUY, "next time you're homesick, let me know," and he gently released her walked away. GIRL hoped he'd return, but she gave up and went to bed.

Next morning Alicia reminded girl that she had a paper due on Friday, so GIRL decided to go to the library and spend the day gathering material. But she let her thoughts wander: "What is he really like?" She hurried back to her room, but GUY was nowhere to be seen; nor did she see him the rest of the week.

On Saturday GIRL stayed in her room, after turning down Alicia's invitation to spend a day at the Lakefront. No one else was around all day and it was now getting dark. Then she heard his whistling. She really had to make an effort to keep from running to the swing and snuggle up beside him. Instead, she sat in a chair.

"Where have you been all week?" he asked.

"Mostly at Tilton Library, working on a paper that was due yesterday. And what have you been doing?"

He didn't answer at first. Then he said, "I'm leaving for camp in the morning - be gone three weeks."

GIRL's heart sank. Three weeks! School would be out, and she'd be going home!

Suddenly he said playfully, "Wouldn't you like to shake the swing with me, please?"

Not wanting to seem too eager, she answered, "Perhaps." He casually put his arm around her shoulders. "When will you be going home?" he said. "In three weeks," was her reply. He pulled her over to him and kissed her gently. "I'll miss you," he said as he got up and went upstairs. GIRL went to her room.

She woke early on Sunday and heard GUY walking downstairs. She dressed hurriedly, hoping he'd stop to say goodbye. But he didn't.

On Monday she rode the streetcar back to "The Home" where she would be for the next three weeks. All the children were glad to see her. Then she learned that, due to a three-day faculty seminar, classes had been called off. Three whole days to do something--and no one to do it with!

That evening GIRL was sitting at the desk of the Infirmary in The Home, where she had duty from 7 to 10. Just before 10 the phone rang. "I'll be there in about ten minutes," GUY said - and hung up. GIRL was shaking. She tidied her desk, passed a comb through her hair, and ran to the big front door to wait for him. He arrived shortly on his bicycle.

GIRL ran down the walk to meet him. He hugged her tight and kissed her. When he released her, she asked, "How come you're back?"

"The camp director decided to take the week to give the place a thorough cleaning, so he won't need me until next Sunday," said GUY. "What a great coincidence, classes have been cancelled 'til Friday. I'm free for the next three days," GIRL answered.

In the morning he was waiting at the door when she came out. They caught the streetcar and rode downtown. They wandered through the old part of town (New Orleans), browsing at antique stores and coin shops. When they came to the court house, GUY said, "Let's check in here. Wonder what you have to do to get married?" GIRL's heart leaped, but she was outwardly calm. "Don't hurt to see," she said.

There was a sign on the door: NOTICE - The three-day waiting period to get married has been lifted. All that's required is that the man have a blood test.

They went into the foyer, where the elevator attendant asked if they were going to get married. "We're more interested in what we have to do to get married," GUY told him. "You have to have cash to pay the fees. You have to have witnesses, the blood test certificate, and be here at four. Judge doesn't start weddings 'til about four." GUY thanked him and they left.

"Who could we get for witnesses?" GUY mused. "I would call a couple of counselors from the Home. Wonder what a ring would cost?" she added. "Let's walk down to Hausman's and see," he said. At the jewelry store they found a plain gold band that she liked - for 5 dollars. The jeweler offered to engrave it free. "Pick it up in two hours," the jeweler said.

GIRL asked permission to the jeweler to use the phone, then called her friend Rose at the Home. Rose was overjoyed at the news. "And Rose," GIRL said, "G'n into my room and bring the five dollars in pennies I've saved up this summer." Rose was sure that everyone at the Home would want to chip in on a wedding present. "Just bring me the money!" girl said, "if it's all the same to you."

GUY returned, waving a paper, and said, "Clean bill of health!" Then he folded the certificate and put it in his pocket. Afterward he asked to use the phone and came back with the announcement. "The honeymoon's arranged. Two nights and two days at the camp for underprivileged kids, including meals." "Where?" she asked. "Over on the coast. We catch the train at 8 tonight. That'll give us time to go home and pack a few clothes, and we can be at camp at 10:30 or 11."

Just then Rose and her friend Honore walked in. They hugged GIRL, shook hands with GUY, and Rose said, "Here's your pennies. And we collected $8.70. Everyone's wishing you luck and happiness."

The ring was ready. GIRL paid for it with pennies. GUY put the ring in his pocket and they all walked to the court house. It was a quarter 'til 4. The elevator attendant saw that they had only two witnesses. "You need three. Wait 'til I get off at 4 and I'll stand up with you," he said.

Upstairs in the court room all were nervous. GIRL held tightly to GUY's hand. The first couple into the judge's chamber was out in about five minutes. The second was even sooner. Then their names were called. The elevator man had just got off and the five of them went into the judge's office.

GIRL looked at GUY with tears in her eyes. "I don't have any flowers," she half-sobbed. He quickly took out his wallet and, after a brief search, handed her a pressed four leaf clover.

The judge, looking toward the window, recited the ceremonial words so rapidly that no one could understand a word. But when he got to the last part it was louder and quite distinct, "I now pronounce you man and wife. Pay the court eight dollars; one dollar for the clerk, two dollars for the recording, and five dollars for THE JUDGE. NEXT!"

GIRL looked at GUY and whispered, "Are we married?" He didn't answer as he hurried out the door.

The three girls caught the streetcar back to the Home and GIRL packed for her two-day honeymoon, while carefully putting away her wedding outfit: a yellow linen skirt, a white eyelet blouse, and white bobby socks. "I'll have to wear my saddle oxfords," she said aloud, "they're all I have."

At 7:30 there was a lot of hugging and kissing at the station, after which GIRL broke free and she and GUY boarded the train. Two hours later they had a one mile walk to the camp. The camp director showed them their cabin, where it was obvious that someone had worked hard. Cots were stacked up at the end, half-hidden by curtains made of bed sheets. The scrubbed bare floor was spotless and someone had located an old iron bed. Bouquets of bright-colored autumn flowers were everywhere in the room. But they weren't there for long. The bride began to sneeze and it was obvious that she was allergic to every one of them.

What a way to start a honeymoon!

City man honored by Jay's speech

Charles Keeney of Charleston said he was surprised that he ended up being mentioned in Sen. Jay Rockefeller's speech to the Democratic National Convention.

But Keeney, a salesman for NAPA, said he missed hearing the speech himself Tuesday night, although he knew ahead of time that his name might be mentioned.

"I also feel that my story is a drop in the bucket compared to what a lot of other people are going through. We feel lucky, really."

Keeney said Rockefeller's office spent the better part of a day trying to locate him and request permission for the senator and former state governor to use his name in the address.

"I didn't hear from him personally," although they said he might call," said Keeney. "The secretary said she didn't know for sure, but she thought it had something to do with my name being used on national TV."

In the speech, Rockefeller mentioned that Keeney's father had Alzheimer's disease and said it was "the same terrible disease that has stricken my mother."

Keeney once met Rockefeller when he appeared before him and the Pepper Commission to detail some of the difficulties families face when they have to care for elderly parents, especially those with health problems.

Keeney said he was surprised that Rockefeller remembered him and tried to track him down.

Keeney said he purchased the home next door to his parents to help care for his father. Rockefeller mentioned that the family's savings had been eroded by the cost of his care and the added costs of sending their son to college.

Rockefeller said Keeney was an example of "how George Bush's America doesn't protect families when they need long-term care."
